As an avid listener to XM radio not only do I find their product entertaining but more so very informative. I lead a busy life just like many others, finding time to even catch up on the world-wide news has become a sensitive issue in my life. XM provides me this opportunity to "catch up" on everything. More to the point, weather and instant traffic reports are crucial to our lives. Life before XM was listening to some guy on any FM station giving me 5 seconds of non-relative information on traffic currents, while playing background interference of chopper blades. Weather, same thing. If NAB wants to promote corporate invasion of public information then I think they should redirect their stance and the parties they represent.
